GREECE'S KING A POPULAR FIGURE

Constantine and His Wife, Sophie, Have Won Their Subjects' Love.

For personal as well as constitutional reasons. King Constantine of Greece is endeavoring to maintain the strictest neutrality in this great war, in spite of the clamor of the populace in favor of intervention on behalf of the Allies, says a writer in London "Tit-Bits." His majesty has ties of relationship with the Allies as well as with Germany, for his wife, who was Princess Sophie of Prussia, is at the same time a granddaughter of Queen Victoris and a sister of the Kaiser.

King Constantine, on the other hand, is a first cousin both of King George and of the Czar, being a nephew of their respective mothers, Queen Alexandra and the Dowager Empress Marie of Russia, who were risters of King Teorge of Greece, King Constantine's rather, who was assassinated two years

EXHID:

After reflection. Hoppe concluded to take a chance in at least one handicap. He said he considered it a duty in the interest of billiards. Realizing that unless action be taken to promote learnaments and matches, interest in hair line will decline and his skill will not get employment, except in exhibitions, he has become enthusiastic about handicapping. Furthermore, after the will be teady to play handicapping. contended that he might be discriminated against and might have to make concessions that would not only prevent him from winning the chief prize, but would enable the player who received the greatest odds to finish first.

Replying, C. P. Miller, of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, said:

"That is exactly what may happen. The theory of handicapping is to give every contestant in every form of sport in which handicapping is to give an equal chance.
